

Travel classes for HUM/TA

In the past, I have had the opportunity to travel with students to locations which enhance our study of Theatre. I have taken groups to London, to New York City and to Rome and Greece. Each location has given us the chance to study the history of theatre and how theatre has played a role in the cultural growth of these countries and our own. When students choose to take class hours along with the travel component, they often write papers about their experience, read a selection of texts relevant to the locations we visit, or prepare journals and do oral presentations regarding their travel experience. I am thrilled to be able to assist in their learning and to be able to add to my knowledge as I always bring back stories and mementoes from my travels for future classes.
