

Learning Objectives: Are written with the expectation that a student should be able to describe, discuss, and explain the chapter content after studying without having to refer back to the textbook. If the student can describe, discuss, and explain the chapter content, embodied in these learning Objectives, to someone who has not taken the course and that person understands it, then it is quite likely the student comprehends it. A student who can do this should be able to recognize the correct answer on the multiple-choice question exams, prepared by the OCCC Psychology Program, which assess these Learning Objectives.
